

Hugh VanLandingham

When Hugh VanLandingham graduated from Robert F. Munroe Academy in Quincy, he knew he wanted to go to college but had not decided where to enroll or what to study. A scholarship offer from Tallahassee Community College tipped the scales, and Hugh began his college career here at TCC, just as his father Sandy had before him.

Although Hugh had not previously considered a career in medicine; that changed when he came across a brochure in TCC's resource room about a pre-med program at Florida State University. He eventually transferred to FSU and studied biology and pre-med, earning his bachelor's degree in 1995. Hugh attended medical school at the University of Florida, graduating in 1999, and returned to Tallahassee Memorial Hospital for the family practice residency program, serving as chief resident his final year. He opened his private practice her in Tallahassee in 2002.

After his return to Tallahassee, Hugh became active in the TCC alumni association. He served on the board of directors for a number of years and contributed toward the development of the alumni scholarship program.

Hugh VanLandingham's professional success and passion for helping others make him a wonderful example for TCC students to follow.
